Corinium

With a moniker taken from the Roman name for AE's hometown of Cirencester, the Corinium flagship is a loudspeaker for the ages. The loudspeaker bristles with innovation, from the Resonance Suppression Composite used in the enclosure to the driver layout, which effectively combines a two-way stand-mount with a three-way, four-driver floorstanding design. In our test, we felt that "the Acoustic Energy Corinium points out the way of things to come for the company at all the levels it contests."

AE309²

While not the cheapest model from Acoustic Energy (that laurel goes to the 100² Series), the AE309² is the most affordable floorstander in the brand's popular 300² Series. A careful reworking of the extremely successful AE309, this new model features a revised soft-dome tweeter and mid-bass units reinforced with coconut fibres. While retaining tried-and-trusted design elements, "It is Hi-Fi when you need it to be and simply good fun when you want to turn up the volume and be transported away from the here and now," we said.

AE1 40th Anniversary Edition

The original Acoustic Energy AE1 stand-mount loudspeaker was not much bigger than a classic BBC LS3/5a yet sounded like a far larger design. While sharing nothing with that original model, the 40th Anniversary Edition is simply the best AE1 Acoustic Energy knows how to make. But this isn't just a nostalgic remake; we felt that it's a "debugged version of a bona fide classic that offers all the excitement and joy of the original in a more manageable, forgiving and capable form."

Established in the UK in 1987, loudspeaker manufacturer Acoustic Energy has consistently pushed the boundaries of audio engineering, combining a deep passion for music with cutting-edge technology without ultra-high-end prices.

Acoustic Energy is renowned for its pioneering use of advanced materials and unique driver designs. This runs from affordable designs that redefine what's possible at the price point to innovative floorstanding models that deliver room-filling performance.

As a measure of the company's consistency, Acoustic Energy has been producing a variant of its ever-popular, two-way stand-mount AE1 loudspeaker for more than 40 years... and it's still a force to be reckoned with!
